THE Premier League finally restarted on Wednesday 17th June, exactly 100 days since it was halted due to the coronavirus.

If you've been missing the footie, you're in for a treat. All remaining 92 games are going to be packed into the next 42 days and many of the matches will be on free TV channels, so everyone can watch.

Football won't be the same as before though. Games will take place in empty stadiums and crowd noise will be added to give the match more atmosphere. Players are being tested for the virus twice a week.

After the three-month break, Liverpool in particular will be raring to go. They are on the verge of winning the competition for the first time in 30 years.

At the moment they sit comfortably at the top of the table, a full 25 points clear of Manchester City in second. They only need two wins from their nine games left to play in order to gain the six points they need to be crowned champions and win the trophy (above).

Players will also have a chance to battle it out for the Golden Boot, awarded to the season's top scorer. Jamie Vardy of Leicester City is currently leading that table with 19 goals.
